District Infantrymen Vote It Has Prettiest Girls Along Route.

BOARD THIRD SECTION, THIRD INFANTRY TROOP TRAIN. WHERE IN ARKANSAS, 8.-The Third Infantry train stopped at Louisville for about an hour and a quarter yesterday, and the men ounting from the cars paraded up and down the station platform, exer-cising themselves. The officers' mounts also were taken out for a run.

Sergt. Waiter Getsinger, together with several men who had missed the pre-ceding sections, were taken on board the Third section, and will travel the rest of the distance to San Antonio on

The men have been busy voting on the prettiest girls to be found along their route. Kentucky lived up to its reputation in this respect, and the vote was given to Central City.

The Third section arrived at Memphis yesterday morning, and all reports of the hospitality of this city have been verified. The militiamen marched through the city while cheering crowds lined the sidewalks. When they reached the Y. M. C. A. the building was given over to them.

After the fun in the Y. M. C. A. the men were put under charge of Dr. Lee A. Stone, as guests of the local chapter of the American Red Cross, of which Gen. S. T. Carmes is chairman. The boys marched through the streets again, surrounded by cheering crowds, and returned to the station.

Charles "Got Mad" When He Looked At Evidence.

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 8.-Charles Craig stuck his fist through the glass frame which held his marriage license, cut an artery in his good strong right, out an artery in his good strong right, was pinched and—feels better.

When Friend Wife and Charles had their periodical quarrel early today, said Charles "just couldn't restrain" himself. So he sought to give vent to his feelings by snatching the knot that binds from the wall and put his flat through it. Bloor spurted from his veins, but he laughed. He was arrested and still laughed.

"I couldn't help it." he told the police. "Every time I looked at it (it being the license) I got mad. I feel better." The police believe he will feel even better after he tells it to the judge.

This Matrimonial Agent Couldn't Keep His Wife

LOS ANGELES, Oct. 8.—Several months ago Benjamin W. Padley, proprietor of a matrimonial agency, advertised through his bureau for a wife. He asked for a young, good-looking woman with means, but said that if he chose another one it would take more means to "reduce her age."

Now, Mrs. Padley, sixty, who mar-ried the commercial "cupid" following the circulation of his advertisement, has a suit for divorce on file, charging failure to provide.

The defendant contends that his wife, though possessed of $12,000, refused to share the household expenses. He as-serts also that his own experience does not necessarily mean matrimonial agen-cles are a failure.

OLD HAVRE DE GRACE

Declares Public Service Board Unreasonable.

BALTIMORE, Oct. 8 .- Argument has been heard and decision reserved by Judge Bond, in circuit court, No. 2. on the application of the Havre de Grace and Perryville Bridge Company for a preliminary injunction prohibiting the enforcement of the order of the public service commission for reduced tolls on the bridge until after the court has heard and determined the suit of the bridge company to have the order of the commission annulled. If the application is denied the reduced rates pre-scribed by the commission will go into effect next Tuesday, October 10. If it is granted the rates of toll now in force will prevail for an indefinite time.

The hearing of the case on its merits was set by Judge Bond for November 8. State Senator Thomas H. Robinson of Harford county, who argued the petition for the bridge company, contended that the valuation of $250,000 placed upon the bridge by the commission and the reduced rates of toll were too lov The action of the commission, Mr. Robinson characterized as arbitrary and unreasonable. The toll for an automobile crossing the bridge is $1. Formerly, Mr. Robinson said $1.50 had to be paid to get an automobile across the Susque-hanna by a roundabout way, but sometimes a boat would take a machine across for $2, the gasolene tank being emptied on one side of the river and re-filled on the other. The company, which assumed the great expense of the bridge, he also said, did not make a dollar out of it until 1915. Aside from the automobile travel, he continued, the company would be in bankruptcy in six months, and traffic over the bridge was most unstable.

. Mentions Value to Public. Mr. Rebinson also asserted that the bridge company filled a public necessity, and it was vitally important that it should have a fair valuation and fair return on that valuation. No in justice would be done anybody, he con-tended, if the court would give the bridge company an opportunity to present expert testimony as to the value of the property. If the reduced rates go into effect Tuesday, he asserted, and the contention of the bridge company is sustained, the rates would be changed again, creating trouble and discord. William Cabell Bruce and Osborne l Yellott, counsel and assistant counsel of the commission, argued that the valuation placed upon the bridge was valuation placed upon the bridge was fair, and so were the reduced rates of toil, the present rates being too high. If the proposed rates die not yield a fair return, Mr. Yellott said, probably the first thing the commission would do would be to increase the rates for motor vehicles from 50 to 25 cents, or charge according to the number of passengers in a machine. This would cause no physical disturbance, he contended.

Wants Injunction Denied. Mr. Bruce contended that the case was not one for a preliminary injuntion. The application for an infunction should be denied, he argued, unless the allegations in the bill were admitted or some substantial one not denied in the

We confess no merit in the bill,"

went on, "but expressly deny that $250,000 is not a fair valuation for the bridge, or that the proposed rates will not yield a fair return.
